The Catastrophe.

This terrible boiler explosion yesterday afternoon, with its appalling loss of life, full particulars of which we publish to-day, forces public attention once more to the important question of how the use of steam may be rendered more safe? There are hundreds of boilers in use in this city, generally in connection with establishments where a large number of persons are employed as operatives, and where an explosion would be followed by results as shockingly destructive to human life as in the instance now before us. Still more, there are boilers in use along our most crowded thoroughfares, which are as liable to explode as the one that blew up yesterday. It is but a short time since this subject was before the authorities, and some measures were then taken looking towards securing a more thorough and careful supervision of the steam boilers in use in this city. Nothing definite, however, we believe was done. The present appalling calamity should quicken public action upon this vitally important topic. Every steam boiler used in this city should be subject to official inspection and supervision. The character and qualifications of engineers and others employed in the care of boilers should be a matter of special care. In many instances, at present, incompetent persons have charge of these terrible engines of destruction, hazarding daily the lives of thousands. Many proprietors are too penurious to pay sufficient wages to secure the services of competent engineers. All this should be a matter for official supervision. By a system of rigid inspection and careful superintendence, the danger from explosions might be reduced to a minimum, and far below what it is now. But still terrible hazards remain. There are explosions which occur which seem to defy all explanation. These seem to be occult properties of steam, which occasionally manifest themselves in the most extraordinary and incomprehensible manner, developing forces of the most terrific character. It is to the reproach of science that we really know so little about an agent which we have so long and so extensively used. Precautions against boiler explosions are generally directed towards the matter of care in their use. This is well; but it is also proper to inquire whether mechanical science has done its best in giving us the safest form of boilers for the generation of the steam. Explosions occur even when the greatest care is used. Boilers may be fatally defective in construction, and yet their dangerous character never reveals itself until some terrible disaster occurs. The minds of thinking men should be directed towards the invention, if possible, of some form of boiler which, in itself, should be incapable of explosion, and which should be comparatively independent of the negligence and ignorance of those having them in charge. We cannot discard the use of steam in civilized life. We must continue to use it, and to use it more extensively even at the hourly hazard of these life-destroying disasters. He would therefore be a great public benefactor who should give to us some form of boiler which, while giving all the practical advantages of the use of steam, should at the same time relieve us from the tremendous risks of explosion. We believe that a distinguished citizen of our city claims to have, at least in a good measure, succeeded in this matter. We are not competent to judge in the case, but such events as those of yesterday must certainly turn the public attention with renewed interest to the entire subject of steam boilers. It should also stir up our city authorities to renewed diligence in exercising a vigilant supervision over the boilers now in use; and, what is still more practical, the explosion of yesterday should be a warning to all engineers to exercise greater care in the line of their special duties. No amount of official supervision can compensate for or guard against the faithlessness or recklessness of the men who have the constant care of these machines. Proprietors, too, should learn the lesson of greater watchfulness. In this case, not the operatives alone, but one of the proprietors himself has met with an awful death. There is a higher moral, which we all might lay to heart, that in the midst of life we are in the presence of death! Amid the terrible forces of nature which we evoke to do our bidding, we are every moment at their mercy. He who in health and strength leaves wife and children in the morning, may be borne back to his home a disabled and lifeless mass ere the evening! Our hearts should be touched with commiseration for the families in our midst that have been so suddenly plunged into the deepest distress, and deeds of generous charity should do what they can to relieve the wants of the widow and the fatherless.

The Threatened Cholera and the "Circumlocution Office."

We have from time to time, for the past two years, directed public attention to the necessity of purifying the city, in view of the possible arrival of the cholera. After incessant labor and daily repetition of the danger, both in season and out of season, the newspapers of the city secured an appropriation from Councils to effect the necessary object, and had a plan adopted which, by its admirable workings, did much to save our city from the plague last summer. We take no credit to ourselves for the persistency with which we urged the reform; we did but speak the sentiments of our readers, and it was their influence, not ours, which gained an unwilling appropriation from Councils. Once more the summer is upon us, once more the cholera is not unlikely to visit us, and again we have been calling for a cleansing of the city. So far we have been calling in vain. It seems that our worthy city fathers think they know more about hygiene than the doctors who compose the Board of Health, and have, accordingly, refused to entrust any funds to them to carry out the object for which the Board was created. The question came up yesterday in Common Council, where a peculiar discussion took place on some peculiar resolutions introduced by Mr. Hancock. This extraordinary document we give entire, hoping our readers can make something out of it, by discarding all grammatical construction, and like judges in equity, seize the spirit of the matter, but avoid its sentences—else a Cretan labyrinth is spread before us:—

Whereas, the newspapers of the city, Board of Health, and Judge of the Supreme Court, have made sundry uncalculated and malicious attacks on the Councils of Philadelphia, for not making an appropriation to the Board of Health, for sanitary purposes; and whereas, an appropriation of $7,400 was made to the Board of Health, for the purpose of using during the year; and whereas, these Councils are not creditable for not making said appropriation to said Board, as they believe they represent the wishes of their constituents, and are better able to understand the wants of the people, and have no faith in said Board to expend said money judiciously and wisely; and that the Judge of the Supreme Court referred to had better attend to his duties as Judge, instead of meddling with a body of men, and interfering in matters that he knows nothing of. Therefore, Section 1. The Board of Health, and the members of the City of Philadelphia do ordain, that the sum of $7,400 be and the same is hereby appropriated to pay for the removal of nuisances, and for the sanitary purposes of the city of Philadelphia, in view of the approach of cholera.

The Trustees of Girard College. We most sincerely congratulate the majority of Select Council on their action yesterday, in postponing the election of three Trustees for Girard College, in order that the Republican caucus could have an opportunity to reconsider the vote by which Mr. Charles E. Lex was stricken from the list of nominees. We do not pretend to enter into an examination of the causes which led to the original omission of Mr. Lex. Every man has an undoubted right to aspire to any position, however high, in the municipality, but he has not the right to displace efficient officers in order to accommodate his friends. Be the cause what it may, Mr. Lex was not renominated, and another gentleman was put in his place. When the case came before Councils, Colonel Page made a moving appeal in favor of a postponement, and his motion was carried by a vote of 19 to 5—12 Republicans having voted for the postponement. We suppose that there can be little doubt but that the nomination will be reconsidered, and Mr. Lex retained in the position he is so eminently qualified to fill. He has been for several years intimately connected with the College, understands all its workings, takes a deep interest in its success, and is exceedingly popular with the scholars. Qualified by a collegiate education to superintend the curriculum of the institution, he has devoted time and ability to its course of study and its plan of discipline. He is no politician, and has therefore been defeated by inconsiderate action; but when the merits of the case have been laid before the members of Select Council, we do not doubt but that they will do justice, not to Mr. Lex, but to the institution, by reselecting him to the post he has so long and ably occupied.

The fearful tragedy detailed elsewhere, which lured a score of human beings into eternity, has awakened the liveliest sympathy in the hearts of our citizens. Not only have many of the poorest of the residents of Philadelphia lost their lives, and many families been bereft of their dearest relatives, but the only means of support on which they depended for their daily bread has been suddenly withdrawn. Not only is the keen anguish of grief visited upon them, but the sad prospect of starvation is superadded. While liberality cannot give them back their lost ones, the wealth of our citizens can at least prevent their immediate ruin, and immediate want. As no concerted steps have been taken to solicit a subscription, and as already several gentlemen have requested us to act as the depository of money to aid the sufferers, we willingly consent to receive such sums as the generous sympathy of our readers leads them to contribute, and will pay over to any regularly selected and trustworthy agent such moneys as may be sent us for the aid of those who presently call on our charity. Such contributions as may be forwarded to us will be duly acknowledged through our columns. The following was left in our hands this morning:—

Mayor is to be made aware of the condition of the streets by the Lieutenants of Police, who, in turn, are to be informed by the Supervisors. The Mayor is to draw a warrant for each sum on the City Treasurer, who pays the money to the Lieutenant, who pays it to the Supervisor, who pays it to somebody else, who probably pockets the money, and does nothing. Now all this circumlocution is to be gone through before a nuisance in the middle of a street can be removed! A pile of refuse matter cannot be hauled away until this interminable routine of red-tape is conformed with. At the most rapid speed it will require two weeks to remove a reported nuisance—meanwhile the pestilence-breeding vapor will be filling the lungs of our people. This is the plan which is superior to the simple system which was inaugurated last year by the Board of Health! It seems like the act of a madman to devise such a circumlocution office. The yellow fever importer, Blackburn, could not do anything more calculated to produce an epidemic. Yet this silly plan was referred to a special committee of ten. If this committee is possessed of any intelligence whatever, it will quash the whole absurd composition. Mr. Hancock, report in favor of the request of the Board of Health, and entrust the safety of the city to those best qualified, and whose duty it is, to see that no contagion comes near our homes. We would suggest to this committee the propriety of asking the City Solicitor whether they can legally deprive the Board of Health of their proper functions.

THE GETTYSBURG ASYLUM FOR INVALID SOLDIERS.

No. 1126 CHESTNUT ST., PHILADELPHIA.

The Board of Supervisors respectfully announces that in order to remove any misapprehension existing in the public mind as to security against loss to the subscribers to this benevolent fund, in case the hostility of the Attorney-General of the Commonwealth, and others, should be successful (of which the Board have no fear whatever), they have requested SAMUEL G. DIEHL, Esq., Deputy Collector of National Revenue, a gentleman well known to the citizens of Philadelphia to take charge of all subscriptions received in the city, and hold them for the protection of the subscribers, until after the legal question is decided by the Supreme Court, on the 31st of July next, or until after the first disposition of awards is made.

There is a determined effort upon the part of persons engaged in illegal and fraudulent lottery schemes in this city and New York, to spare no efforts and no expense to defeat the noble object for which this Association was created, and, at the proper time, the names of these persons have played, and are playing, will be exposed to the public. For the present, the Board of Supervisors desire only to satisfy the patriotic citizens of Philadelphia that in subscribing to this enterprise they run no risk of a misappropriation of their money. They have, therefore, authorized Mr. DIEHL to receive and hold, for the benefit of subscribers, all subscriptions hereafter received in this city; to be returned to said subscribers should the enemies of the project prove successful in defeating it. The money, as received by Mr. DIEHL, will be deposited in the Pennsylvania Company for Insurance on Lives and Granting Annuities.

It is hoped that under this arrangement a sufficient number of subscriptions will be received to warrant a disposition of the property of the Association, within a month's time, so that the Trustees of the Fund may be appointed by the Governor, and the building commenced on the ground already purchased.

Subscription Books, upon this guaranteed plan, are now open at No. 1126 CHESTNUT STREET.
